 Edith Heywood, in Christian Union.
 "Please, sir, give me a ride."
 Deacon Fox stopped his horse and peered round the side of his old buggy.
 On the road stood a little girl, the top of her head almost even with the top of the deacon's car's top, and by her side ran and a hundred deacons, — so there, Jack Bly!"

 and Bessie turned her face to the wall and wouldn't say another word.

The next morning when she opened her eyes, they fell upon her mother's face bending over her. "Get up, Bessie," said Mrs. Bly, "and dress carefully. I have something for you to do this morning."

Bessie had forgotten all about the night before, and, skipping out of bed, proceeded to dress and go down stairs in the best of spirits.

"What's all this, what's all this?" cried the deacon, sharply. "What are you stopping me on the road for?"

"I thought perhaps you would give me a ride," said the little girl, looking rather frightened. "We are both going the same way, and my basket is awfully heavy; just lift it and see."

The deacon stared.

"May I get in?" she continued, scrambling up, basket and all, and taking the empty seat beside him.

And never a word did the deacon say, but he gave old Dobbin, who had been placidly switching the flies off with his tail, such a sharp touch of the whip that away they went rattling along the road, and almost bouncing out of the carriage.

Then the deacon turned and looked at the little companion, beginning with the pink

"Bessie," said her mother, as she entered the kitchen, "you cause me a great deal of anxiety. I have been thinking of your behavior of yesterday, and have made up my mind that you must go up to the deacon's and apologize."

"What's that, mother?" asked Bessie, frightened out of her wits.

"That means to ask his pardon for your rudeness of yesterday. You must say you regret your behavior very much, and will never do so again; and now you have finished your breakfast, go right along, and be sure you speak pretty."

Bessie put on her bonnet and started toward the big house at the top of the hill. She was a good deal frightened, for "apologizing" seemed to her an awful thing to do, and the deacon much more formidable than the day before. Nevertheless, her mother had told her to go, and she did not stop until she pulled the bell black sheep of the flock,"—not belonging to our denomination—but betraying a strong desire to profit by the day's proceeding. Please insert, also, the name of Miss Lottie Walters, one of the lambs of the flock. The ride up the new road was certainly delightful. Nature favored us with one of those soft, beautiful spring mornings that drive all care from the heart, and make one feel that surely our Bountiful Father has bestowed countless blessings on us.

The younger members of the company had the privilege of riding on the platform and enjoying the soft rushing air as we swept through fields and meadows. We must here mention the kindness of the officers of the road in explaining all that was in store for us. As we were arriving in Borgestown at 9:30 A. at the deacon's door. The old nurse-keeper appeared, however, to ring and demanded what she wanted.

"I want to see the deacon," said Bessie, timidly.

"He is at his breakfast," said the old lady, eyeing Bessie somewhat suspiciously.

"Never mind," said Bessie. "I'll go right in; it is very particular."

So the old lady opened the dining-room door, and Bessie walked in. She had never been in such a big room before, in her life, and there, at one end of a large table, with his breakfast before him, sat the deacon all alone.

"Good morning," said Bessie, standing timidly in the doorway, with her bonnet in her hand. "I have come to see you."

The deacon looked up greatly surprised, and then he laughed as he had laughed the day before, a short, queer laugh.

Rev. Fredericks and several ladies of the congregation. We were taken at once to the Presbyterian Church, as the hour for the morning meeting was drawing near. After spending half an hour in social intercourse the meeting was opened. As accounts have already been given of it, we will pass to other objects. A great deal of interest was evinced by all present. The meeting was composed entirely of ladies. Some very interesting reports were read from the different auxiliaries; some of these showed that the home, as well as the foreign missions, had been remembered. The meeting adjourned at 12:30 o'clock to meet again at 1:30.

It is very sweet when one in strange places, has stranger faces around you to listen to the praises of our beloved missionary's wife (Mrs. Dr. Cunningham, President of the Society), poured forth from earnest lips. She presides over the

It was he who punished the naughty boys, and reprimanded the naughty girls; and it was he who always asked them terrible questions when he came to call upon their mamma. So it was a strange sight to see the old deacon, with his keen eyes twinkling beneath his bushy eyebrows and his stern, hard face, driving in his old buggy, with one of the school-children and a market basket by his side. They drove along some little distance in silence, and then the deacon felt his sleeve pulled by gentle and rather little fingers. He looked down and two large blue eyes met his.

"Are you cros", said Bessie, "cos I asked for a ride?"

"Tut, tut!" child, said the deacon.

"Then, if you aint, why don't you talk to me?" continued Bessie, "and ask me who discovered America? You always ask us that."

"No," said Bessie, thinking how she should bring in "her apologies."

"Well, come in, child, come in," he said impatiently, "and sit down."

Bessie came in, and taking one of the big chairs opposite the deacon watched him fill a plate with all sorts of good things.

"Do you eat your dinner as well as your breakfast all alone?" she asked at last. "Haven't you any little girls or boys—not one?"

"None."

"If I had known that," she went on, looking at him wistfully, "I would have brought my breakfast in a pail and eaten it with you."

"Suppose you try this," said the deacon, handing her the plate he had filled. Bessie wasn't hungry, but she thought it might do her no harm to try one of the meeting with such sympathetic simplicity that we love to say "she belongs to us." A comparison was pointed out to us yesterday. It seemed such a strange one that we cannot help mentioning it, viz.: "Something so quiet and gently about her; she reminds me of what I have always imagined Queen Victoria to be!"

The afternoon meeting was even more interesting than the morning. Miss Jennie McClear's paper on Mission Work was listened to with the greatest interest. Perhaps one of the most touching events of the day was the closing prayer by Miss Gordon, an elderly lady of New Cumberland. In quivering tones she commenced, but soon her voice became as clear and distinct as a child's. That profound stillness which so often prevails when an intense interest is felt, prevailed to a saddening degree. We "Then is to be hoped you know by this time," said the deacon. Do you go to Sunday-school, child?"

"Oh, yes," said Bessie, folding her hands and crossing her thumbs as though she were about to repeat a lesson.

"I learn to do onto others as I would they should do unto me," replied Bessie, glibly, "and to love my neighbor as my self."

"So you learn all that," said the deacon. "Well, that's something; and who is your neighbor? Does he go blackberrying with you?"

"Oh, yes," said Bessie, laughing, "but then he is my next door neighbor, you know. It don't mean I am to love him, for, of course, I should do that, but it means I am to love every body. Even you."

"Well," said the deacon looking down at her, "how are you going to manage that?"

"I am very sorry you are all alone," began Bessie after a moment's silence.

"Wouldn't you like a little girl like me?"

"And what good do little girls like you do?" asked the deacon.

"Oh, none at all," said Bessie, "only if you had one she could love you lots."

"So she could," said the deacon, with something of a sigh, and after that he let Bessie do all the talking until the old housekeeper came to the door and said the horse was waiting at the gate. Then what do you suppose the deacon said? Nothing less than this: "Well, Bessie, how would you like to take another ride home with me?"

"Oh, I'd like it, lots," said Bessie, jumping up and clapping her hands. "And then you can jingle me. I don't invite

"Why, I must love you, of course," replied Bessie. "Do you mind your music?"

"Yes, I must do so the Sunday school," replied the deacon, and then he laughed; though what there was to laugh at Bessie couldn't for the life of her think.

On they went, old Dobbin, Bessie, and the deacon, now up hill and now down, till they came to a tiny cottage standing under the shadow of a big house.

"Here's where I live," said Bessie brightly, and there where you live, Jan? It is convenient?" and she kissed her hand to the deacon and skipped down. He handed her the basket, and Bessie, opening the gate and calling out, "Good by," walked up the little path that led to the cottage door.

"Certainly," said the deacon, "I invite you;" and out they went, and Bessie scrambled up once more into the old buggy.

They had a merry ride home, for the deacon's hat blew off, and he had to chase it along the road, Bessie laughed till the tears rolled down her cheeks, and even the deacon smiled when he was once more seated at her side.

When they drove up to the door of the cottage Mrs. Bly met them.

She thanked the deacon for bringing Bessie home, and then turning to her little girl, who had jumped down after giving the deacon a kiss for thanks, asked if she had apologized prettily.

"There," said Bessie, "I thought I had forgotten something."

"You don't mean to say you forgot to tell him what you went up for?" cried Mrs. Bly.

"Yes, I forgot to tell him that I love him," said Bessie, and then she ran up the path and knocked at the door.

"Come in," called a voice from within.

"I have something to tell you," said Bessie, and then she told him that she loved him.

"I love you too," said the deacon, and then he kissed her.

With the deacon?" repeated Mrs. Bly. "Well, Bessie, what an honor! I hope you thanked him prettily. What ever made him think of inviting you?"
"He didn't," said Bessie, untying her bonnet and sitting down; "I invited him!" Mrs. Bly let the tea-kettle almost drop, and Aunt Jimema held up her hands and sank speechless into a chair. Bessie and Jack standing in the doorway gave vent to a whistle as shrill as a small locomotive.

Bessie started from one to the other. "What's the matter?" she said. "Well," cried Aunt Jimema, as soon as she had breathed enough to speak, "if I're not the farthest child I ever saw! Asking the deacon, as part as you please, to give you a ride, as if you didn't, wasn't the richest man in town, and you didn't see him every blessed Sunday passing the plate?"
"He astonished at you, Bessie," said

the fact that Mayor Luddell expressed a determination to promptly enforce the new law, there is not a saloon in the city, and that in full blast. The dodge now practiced is a very simple but effective one. When the first raid was made upon the institutions the lady waiters because lady conversationalists, and until the ordinance under which such places were suppressed was declared illegal, they kept their places in this guise. Now that the Legislative bill has passed they have adopted another method. The girls are customers. They visit the saloons each night, retain their hats and outside garments, and sit about in the company of the young men who frequent the establishments. Probably the Mayor thinks that this practice cannot be broken up, but the Law and Order Society would take hold of the question it might perhaps prevent such a transparent evasion."

"The value of this remedy must not be overlooked in the cure of the following diseases,"
SYPHILITIC DISEASES,
Affections of the Eye, Ear, Throat, Lungs and Irregular Tubes which in many cases accompany a severe syphilitic attack. The irritable and diseased condition of the uterine membrane is the cause of all these troubles and until the system is cured, no permanent relief can be obtained. It is a bad cure, perfect freedom from the disease is not reasonably expected.

It is but three years since SANFORD'S RADICAL CURE was introduced into this country, and that short time it has found its way from Maine to California, and is everywhere acknowledged by Physicians and Patients. It is the best and most reliable preparation for the thorough treatment of Catarrh of the Bladder, and it is so simple and so of more importance when it is coupled with the statement that it is a safe and reliable remedy for Catarrh for Catarrh have been placed on sale, and to-day with one or two exceptions, their names are not recalled by the Board of Health or the Board of Advertising may succeed in forcing a few sales, but the remedy is not a permanent cure, and the medical properties, it is absolutely certain to fall into merited obscurity.

From my old stand, corner of Market and Ninth streets, in the stone house formerly occupied by A.
C. Barker & Co., on the her mother reproachfully. "It will be all of the same about it," said Geo. Heil, "and over town, next, and what the neighbors will say of my I'm sure I can't think of."
"If she were my child she should go to bed without any supper," continued Aunt Jemima.
"Why do you set her?" said her mother.
"Any one would imagine, to see you, you had any bringing up. Now, Beanie, eat this piece of bread and go to bed."
But Beanie couldn't eat. She was very unhappy, and all she could say was, "I had a very pleasant ride, mamma."
As this didn't mend matters she poked up her bonnet and went up-stairs. After she had been in bed a few minutes Jack came in and sat down. The son was just $14,000 daily, or $14,600,000 annually.
Reckoning the ratio between malt and alcoholic drinks as four to one, we would realize under the Moffitt law $530,000, or $1,898,000 annually. Large as this sum may be, it is not so large as the sum we do not do, it is more the market. A good said of late about it, and then under Ac-society, but nothing has been ordered accomplished. The saloons are all open on Sunday, and the gambling houses are doing a thriving business. There is plenty of material for the organization to go work upon, and as the city authorities do not seem disposed to take the initiative the mission is missing a good opportunity.

of Rev. J. R. Thompson, A. M., is entering upon a new era of prosperity. During the Spring Term just closed, the attendance was 100 students, and the cost of $10 per cent. It has a large and scholarly Faculty; a beautiful, healthful and moral location, ample scientific and Philosophical apparatus, Library consisting of 5,000 volumes, and the most thorough character; a standard of scholarship surpassed by no American institution of learning.
This University can save time at any other school known to afford equal advantages. The Fall term begins September, fifth; the Winter term January 26, and continues until June 17th. For infor-
